"Net Neutrality is important! What the telco's and cable companies are doing is exactly what the Chinese government does to internet connections in China; the only difference is there it is state sponsored, whereas here it is done by the private sector. To allow these companies to get away with this is akin to letting them become 'big brother' of the Internet, where eventually everything will be controlled and filtered by them. "I was at the last town-hall meeting with the FCC last year and was amazed at the chairmans total disregard for what the majority of people were saying. He is obviously already in the pocket of big business. What happened to the "will of the people"?"

"Please consider how important the Internet has become for ordinary people, in the blogging community, and in small startup businesses, like my American haiku Art business (Ameriku Ltd, www.ameriku.com). I hope you'll preserve freedom of speech through equal access to the Internet. Unequal access would impose a class system—and trap the majority of Americans as second class citizens of the Internet. I hope you'll agree that it would be anti-American to give a few companies the power to turn the Internet into a virtual monopoly for their own ends. "
